

Healthcare Reform Updates

What's At Stake...

If you are one of the over 160 million American workers receiving healthcare from your employer, you should know your coverage may be at risk. Congress is debating the future of health care and many lawmakers want to create a costly new government bureaucracy that could replace your workplace healthcare and would add $240 billion to our nation's deficit according to the Congressional Budget Office.

We should build on health care that works for millions of Americans and cover the more than 45 million who still need coverage. We must also address rising costs to make healthcare affordable for everyone.

More costly government programs will only create more problems, not solve the ones we have.

Congress should build on the current employer-sponsored system, with subsidies for those who need them, to cover more Americans and ensure continued access to quality, affordable healthcare.
